Advising on Stray Cat Health Issue

Hoping for Advice on Stray Cat Health Issue

I found a cat under my car this evening. It followed me around for awhile, and I thought it might be lost. I'm not sure if it's a stray or a feral cat.

I'm not a practicing physician, but I do have some advice. First, think of what you would want the finder to do if they found your pet. This can help you make decisions about whether to try to keep the cat or not.

If you're not sure if the cat is stray or feral, there are some things you can do to help identify it. Look for a collar or identification tag. If you don't see one, try to find other clues that might indicate whether the cat is stray or feral.

For example, if the cat is in an area where there are a lot of people and vehicles, it's more likely to be a stray. If the cat is in an area where there are not many people and vehicles, it's more likely to be a feral cat.

You can also try to find out if the cat has been seen before. If you know of anyone who has seen the cat before, ask if they have any information about it.

Once you have some information about the cat, you can make a decision about whether to keep it or not. If you decide to keep the cat, you will need to take care of it properly. This includes feeding it, providing a litter box, and taking it to the vet for check-ups.

If you decide not to keep the cat, it's important to release it in a safe area where it can thrive. If you're not sure where to release it, you can contact your local animal control agency for advice.

Good luck with your decision! If you have any other questions, feel free to ask.
