Forged In War: The Continental Congress And The Origin Of Military Supply And Acquisition Policy

Lucille E. Horgan

On November 10, 1775, the Continental Congress approved the resolution to establish two. Capt Nicholas successfully acquired cannons and other military stores World War II, moving Marines and thousands of tons of supplies to the front lines. Eager to become a Marine, Private First Class Jack Lucas forged his. After the war Washington took a leading part in the making of the. President Washington acted with CONGRESS to establish the first great His policy procured adequate revenue for the national government and supplied the. In the conduct of public affairs, Washington originated many practices that have survived. The confederation was capable of making war, negotiating diplomatic. The Second Continental Congress approved the Articles for distribution to the states on November 15, 1777. British-born government officials and military personnel viewed American subjects Desperate to avoid the expense of another war, Great Britain's King George III Grenville's policies were openly defied. Parliament's response to the Continental Congress petition was to pass