New Zealand Explorers: Great Journeys Of Discovery The European 'discovery' of the interior would be a much longer process. The earliest European explorers of New Zealand's interior were the early missionaries. The 1846 journey by Thomas Brunner and Charles Heaphy was one of the most arduous. The last great wave of European exploration in New Zealand was 1985, English, Book, Illustrated edition: New Zealand explorers: great journeys of discovery / Philip Temple.

Pete's Journeys: Great Journeys of Discovery For your 1985 book, New Zealand Explorers: Great Journeys of Discovery, you retraced the journeys of a number of early European explorers. What did this tell you about New Zealand's history?

In their search for the vast 'terra australis incognita' the unknown southern land thought to lie in the Pacific, explorers made daring journeys across uncharted .
